$100,000 rescues ailing Foothill Freeway plan

By DON GREEN
Staff Writer

Keeping the route alive but not well, the California Transportation Commission allocated a "token" $100,000 Friday to protect the Foothill Freeway right of way from development for a year.

The action came during the commission's meeting in Sacramento, where it adopted the five-year State Transportation Improvement Plan (STIP). The STIP is revised annually.

Information about the commission's move and its meaning was sketchy late Friday afternoon. The commission staff could not be reached after the meeting broke up.

However, Wes McDaniel — executive director of San Bernardino Associated Governments (SANBAG) — attended the meeting and phoned the results to Johnni Hansen, deputy executive director.

Hansen said the commission allotted just $100,000 to protect right of way threatened by development along the entire 28.3-mile proposed extension of the freeway from La Verne to San Bernardino through Upland and Rancho Cucamonga.

Local officials had hoped at one time for $1 million this year to be divided equally between Los Angeles and San Bernardino counties for land acquisitions.

Hansen described the amount as "token." While the money would buy relatively little land, Hansen said the $100,000 in reality would do even less. The funds probably will not be spent as long as the crunch on the state's highway account continues, she said.

However, without the allocation, the Foothill Freeway would not be part of the five-year STIP of highway projects, Hansen said.

She said the money's real value is that it "keeps the project alive in the eyes of public and private interests." The California Department of Transportation (Caltrans) can continue to negotiate for right-of-way land, she pointed out.

City and county governments along the route can continue to withhold permits for development in the right of way because the freeway extension is in the STIP, Hansen added.

But she could not say what would happen if a landowner with property in the right of way sued state and local governments for inverse condemnation, the taking of a property's value without compensation.

Staff members for the commission and Caltrans recommended no money be allocated for the Foothill Freeway, which the state agencies consider a low-priority project that cannot warrant state funding unless transportation revenues are increased.

Because money had not been set aside before Friday for the freeway extension, Hansen said the commission's decision could be considered a victory by freeway supporters.

Told of the action, Hal Bailin, president of the Foothill Freeway Association, referred to the STIP and said, "Well, we want it to be in there."

Asked if freeway supporters made out better than expected, he said, "No, I expected them to live up to their original agreement for at least a modest amount."

In January, the commission declared its intent to protect the right of way from encroaching development through December 1982. That resolution also stipulated that without new state transportation revenues the state's "financial capacity to protect the right of way will be extremely limited."

The fate of the Foothill Freeway has tottered back and forth ever since Caltrans recommended dropping the route extension from state highway plans in 1977.

The commission made it clear Friday that additional funds for the freeway hinge on SB 215, a bill by state Sen. John Foran, D-Daly City, to increase the per-gallon gas tax by two cents and other transportation revenues.

The bill was passed by the Senate and received an important approval just this week from the Assembly Transportation Committee.

Longer-range prospects to raise the millions of dollars required for construction depend on whether local with the state's help, to raise local funds for of the part of the cost.

A native of Los Olivos, Todd Ochoa knows what it is like for the youngsters he helps out in the project's community center. He says many former troublemakers are turning to Christianity.

Stigma

Los Olivos address creates problems for some

This is the third and final story in a series examining the history, problems and people of the Los Olivos housing project in Upland.

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

She moved to the Los Olivos housing project in Upland 30 years ago and raised all 12 of her children in a succession of different units throughout the complex.

Several of her sons have had run-ins with the law. One, she says, has been in jail, but never in prison. Another, credited by some to be the ringleader of a gang, she says has straightened out since he and his girlfriend had a baby.

Six of her children still live at home. Although she says no one has ever really bothered her, it upsets her when her sons are blamed for nearly every problem in the neighborhood.

Like many other residents, she is willing to talk about what it is like to live in Los Olivos, but asks that her name not be used.

"It's not that I am afraid," she says, with an apologetic smile, "but you never know when you might offend somebody. I would just rather you not put my name in the paper."

She is a mother, and like any mother is concerned about the welfare of her children. One 15-year-old daughter was refused a job in the District Attorney's office, reportedly because of her brothers' reputations. One son, she says, may be harassed by police cruising the neighborhood, asking questions about another son they haven't seen recently who is considered a troublemaker.

"Sometimes, I just don't understand the police," she says, shaking her head slowly. "They drive through here at night and shine their lights into the houses and on the porches where people are sitting. It upsets the younger boys."

Too many times, she says, her sons are falsely accused of wrongdoings.

"My boy says to me, 'You know Mom, I give up. I just tell them, yeah, I'll go ahead and do it next time if you're so convinced. That way I'll make you right.'"

She says she has paid to have windows and planters fixed that were vandalized, even though her sons were not involved. Much of the time, she thinks boys from outside the neighborhood commit the acts, but local youngsters are blamed.

"You know, people look down on you when they find out you're from Los Olivos.

"But I'm here because I have to be. I can't afford to live anywhere else. I would love to live somewhere where I had a yard and a fence."

She doesn't think Los Olivos is a bad place, but is disturbed by "people from the north part of town who drive by and stare at us." She thinks management should be stricter with families who don't live according to the rules, and evict those who try to cram more people into the small units than are allowed.

Again, like many mothers, she has a scrapbook with newspaper clippings of her sons. The trouble is, she says sadly, most come under the heading of "police reports."

Todd Ochoa, 19, says he's been in a few newspapers articles himself, both good and bad. He's lived in the housing project since he was 5, and now directs the recreation program at the Los Olivos Community Center.

"I did my share of bad stuff," he says, leaning back in a padded chair in his office, "but I finally came to see it was nonsense.

"Like I try to tell the kids, two wrongs don't make a right. If he throws a ball at you," he says, gesturing towards two imaginary children, "does it make it better if you throw one at him?"

Ochoa says he's trying to work with police these days, rather than against him. He resents those that seem to carry a chip on their shoulder against Hispanics, but has discovered many who are "pretty straight with me."

"It's hard for other people to understand, but some of the trouble barrio kids get into, it's all part of tradition.

"Just like some families always go to grandma's for a turkey dinner, or others always send their kids to private schools. The barrio is like a big family, and you follow the barrio rules."

Another side of the community many outsiders never see is the pride residents feel, says Ochoa.

"I love my town. I love my barrio and I love my past. That's what my tattoos show."

He pulls up a shirt sleeve. On one arm are the Romanesque letters ULO, for Upland, Los Olivos. His first name is in blue across the top.

"That's my girlfriend."

The words Upland and Los Olivos are intertwined, crossword style above, and a shabby little character on his shoulder he says stands for what he used to be like.

"This place has really changed in the last year," says Ochoa. "The Lord has filled a lot of guys' lives, and some of the very baddest dudes have done a lot of changing."

He said the impact can also be seen on the younger children, who like to imitate their older brothers.

"Sure, you still have some throwing rocks and stuff, but there are a hundred families here. The (Christian) movement is growing though."

Johnny and Robbin Smith moved to Los Olivos about four months ago, and became the second black family in the predominantly Hispanic community. They say they've been accepted by their neighbors, and are pleased with their quarters.

"I'm pretty quiet," said Smith, "and I figured I may never really get a chance to meet my neighbors. But they've been real nice. We get along fine."

Another resident, a white woman aged 39, says she has never had any trouble.

"There are times I'd like to move into a bigger place, but I like it here. I think the schools are good, and my children are happy."

She said her daughter is occasionally bothered by the stigma associated with the community, so she tends not to tell people where she lives.

"If some of these people with negative feelings would just take the time to walk around here a little and get to know some of the residents, I think they would feel differently," she said, echoing many of her neighbors' feelings.

Another Hispanic woman, who has lived in Los Olivos for 17 years, apologizes for her halting English. The occasional shooting incidents scare her, she says, and make her worry, especially about her two sons.

"I think the police do their best," she said, "but people (residents) who see the shooting just don't want to get involved.

"Sometimes I just feel like crying, but it's better, I suppose, than getting in trouble."

Both of her sons have been shot in separate incidents, although neither was seriously injured.

"I'm almost glad my sons don't know who did it," she says. "At least now they won't try to get revenge."

For many residents, the trend does seem to be reversing from the violence of the past. Lora "Santa" Leon, 29, has lived in the community off and on for 13 years, and now works in the day care center on the grounds.

"You know what most people don't see is these kids during the day, fixing up the yards, painting the place and working like crazy," she says. "You see a lot more kids with ladders and brushes than you do with guns."

She is hopeful that the day care center will help the younger children acclimate to the difference between the Anglo and the Hispanic cultures, and give youngsters a head start in English.

"This public attitude has a negative effect on the community," says Leon. "We're just a big neighborhood, with a bunch of people trying to survive like everyone else.

"And what neighborhood do you go into and not see a bunch of kids hanging around and talking? But at Los Olivos, they're called a gang."

Leon says she is much more frightened to go into some neighborhoods in Ontario than she is about living in Los Olivos.

"We've had some bad situations here we've regretted," she said. "But I think it's everyone's fault. I think all of us, the people here and the outsiders, should take responsibility and try to make this a better city as a whole."

Lora Leon, a Los Olivos resident for 13 years, thinks the housing project has been saddled with an undeserved reputation. "What neighborhood do you go into and not see a group of kids hanging around and talking — but at Los Olivos, they're called a gang."

For 1981-82 year

Upland Chapter installs officers

"Remember, we make a living by what we get, but we make a life by what we give," said Mrs. Thomas T. Parker as she installed the 1981-82 officers of the Upland Chapter of Assistance League.

The installation climaxed the league's annual meeting held recently at the League Center in Cucamonga and saw Mrs. Wolfgang Koessler, a past president, installed as president for the coming term.

Serving with her will be: the Mmes. David Tobias, vice president; James Edgerton, recording secretary; Robert Johnson, corresponding secretary; Rufus Turner, ways and means; Wallace Hay, Girls Club of Cucamonga chairman; Walter J. Mastin, San Antonio Community Hospital Dental Center; Palmer Davis, house chairman; James Bell, public relations; Alan Carlisle, membership; Richard Verrue, hours coordinator; Donald Clark, Assisteen adviser; Howard Scarborough, Las Tias chairman; Thomas Hancock, regional council representative; G.A. Park, regional council alternate; and John Nugent, special projects.

"I feel honored and humbled to serve again," said Mrs. Koessler, who served as president 10 years ago. She noted that the money raised by Assistance League and returned to the community has doubled in the past 10 years.

'Little Bit Country' ball

'Cowgirls' will welcome guests

Welcoming guests to the 12th annual OPARC (Ontario - Pomona Association for Retarded Citizens) ball Sept. 12 at Red Hill Country Club will be 12 Chino "cowgirls" garbed in Western outfits.

Tagged, "Little Bit Country," the ball will feature a no-host cocktail hour followed by dinner at 8 p.m. During the cocktail hour from 7 to 8, a Blue Grass band will provide the music. Lou Catalano and his band will play during the dinner hour and for dancing into the night.

In the entry area of the country club, Las Vegas gaming tables will be set up. Guests will use play money to "gamble" for a variety of prizes.

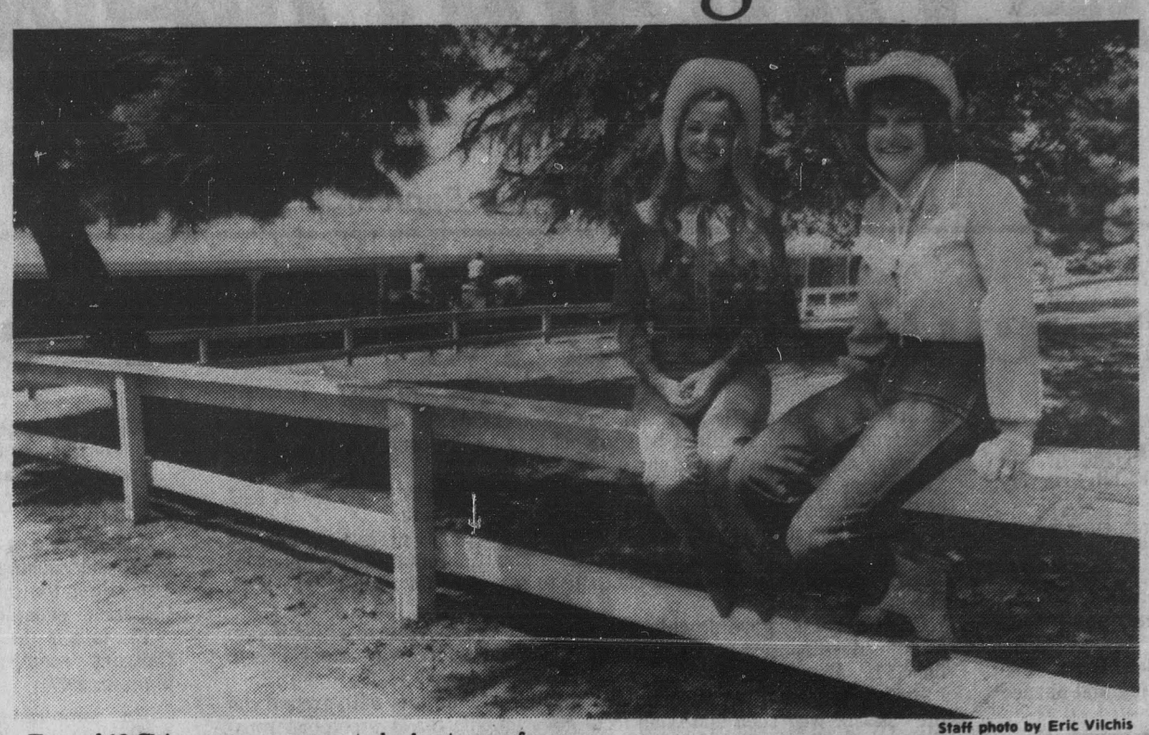

Following dinner, Bill Hill will conduct a live auction. Some of the prizes are diamonds, free baby delivery (donated by a local physician), oil paintings, porcelain dolls, sailboat rides, weekends away and numerous other items.

There also will be a silent auction for guests to browse and make bids. A featured prize of the evening will be a gold cowboy boot pendant set with diamonds and sapphires.

The hostess, all from Chino, will be Marie Vander Schaaf, chairman, Wendy Kroes, Heidi Nyenhuis, Laurie De Boer, Val Schilder, Diana Visser, Belinda Vander Laan, Linda Tjaarda, Colleen Siegersma and Evie De Boer, all recent graduates of Ontario Christian High School, and Evie De Boer and Cheryl Bos, Chino High School graduates.

Proceeds from the ball will go into the Ontario-Pomona Association for Retarded Citizens' general fund to be used for the OPARC Center which includes the Day School, Diversified Industries Inc., Community Outreach Parent Educator program and for scholarships.

Over the past 11 years, the OPARC Auxiliary has been able to give the charitable organization over $150,000. Some of the funds have been used as "seed money" for grants from state and Private foundations.

Hispanic activists vow to keep pressuring for reapportionment

By DON GREEN
Staff Writer

Fresh from arrests in the Capitol office of Assembly Speaker Willie Brown, Hispanic activists said last week they would go to jail again if necessary to get a fair shake in reapportionment.

Armando Navarro and two other leaders of Californios for Fair Representation vowed to keep pressure on Brown and the rest of the Legislature for Hispanic gains in reapportionment plans that will help shape political fortunes for the next decade.

At a press conference in San Bernardino, the Californios leaders described events surrounding the arrests in Brown's office Monday night and outlined future reapportionment strategy.

The speaker has been a target for Hispanic groups ever since his remarks in late April that heavily Latino Assembly districts would not be created at the expense of incumbent Democrats.

He also said efforts for Hispanic gains in reapportionment are hampered by a track record of low voter registration and turnout in Hispanic communities.

Navarro — executive coordinator of Californios and president of the National Congress for United Communities — one reason for the sit-in was to have the speaker explain his comments.

More than 300 Hispanics from around the state converged on the Capitol on Sunday night for a mass and rally, according to the organization. Picketing began Monday morning outside the statehouse in Sacramento.

Later that morning, as many as 40 Hispanics crammed into Brown's office and refused to leave until the speaker agreed to a meeting. After nearly 11 hours, state police took 12 people, including Navarro, into custody at 9:45 p.m.

They were arrested on misdemeanor charges for remaining closed to the public. The charges were dismissed at Brown's request, and the 12 were released Tuesday morning.

Press accounts described the sit-in as peaceful.

Navarro said, "Whatever happened, happened. If we have to go to jail again, we will go to jail again.

"If we have to go to jail to make a point and show our determination, some of us are prepared to go the fullest extent of the game of politics and pay the price if necessary to make sure that the interests, not only of the Latino community, but of all people who are oppressed and in need of representation, are felt and respected."

He added, "It appears that the politicians only understand that kind of organized strength."

Asked about reports that Brown had agreed Monday to a meeting on Tuesday, Navarro said repeated attempts to arrange a meeting had been rejected by Brown in recent weeks after he had earlier pledged to do so.

Therefore, the plan was for the sit-in to continue until Brown arrived, he said.

Navarro said he questions Brown's "veracity" and "integrity" and threw out a "challenge" by adding, "He's a liar in terms of what happened that Monday."

Brown or his staff told reporters he returned to his San Francisco district, but he was reportedly seen Monday evening at The Torch Club, a Sacramento nightspot frequented by politicians, Navarro said.

Californios is trying to arrange a meeting next week with Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., asking him to publicly support Hispanic reapportionment gains and to veto any reapportionment plan that treats Hispanics unfairly, they said.

Navarro said fair reapportionment would create five Assembly districts where Hispanics make up at least half the population.

Immunizations required

Now shoes and clothes are not the only things youngsters will need to start school next month.

State law requires that all children entering school be immunized against diphtheria, pertussis (whooping cough), tetanus, measles, mumps, rubella and polio. Children without proper documentation of immunizations will not be admitted to school.

The San Bernardino County Health Department will offer free "back-to-school immunization clinics throughout the West End.

No appointments are necessary. Children must be accompanied by a parent or legal guardian, and they are advised to bring the child's immunization records.

The dates and times of clinics are:

—Saturday, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at Ontario Community Hospital, 550 N. Monterey Ave., Ontario.

—Saturday, Sept. 12, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at Doctor's Hospital, 5000 San Bernardino Ave., Montclair

—Monday, Sept. 14, from 9 to 11:30 a.m. at the Ontario Health Office, 325 E. C St., Ontario.

—Monday, Sept. 21, from 9 to 11:30 a.m. at the Ontario Health Office, 325 E. C St., Ontario.

— Monday, Sept. 21, from 1:30 to 4 p.m. at the Chino Health Office, 13260 Central Ave., Chino.

—Wednesday, Sept. 23, from 12:30 to 3:30 p.m. at the Cucamonga Neighborhood Center, 9791 Arrow Highway, Rancho Cucamonga.

Juniors honored for achievements

The Montclair-Ontario Junior Women's Club has been honored for outstanding community achievement by the California Federation of Women's Clubs and the Bank of America.

The club was one of 41 winners selected from among 175 junior clubs throughout the state in the annual "Build a Better Community" project competition.

Darlene Edwards, Montclair-Ontario Junior women's Club President, recently received a check for $150 for the organization's third place finish in the competition.

The presentation was made by W.D. Leavelle, vice president and manager of the Ontario Bank of America. The club had previously received a silver tray from the bank.

During the past year, the 175 Junior Women's Clubs of California devoted thousands of hours to approximately 3,700 community projects including environmental protection, health, safety, family life and culture enrichment. The clubs were responsible for raising $585,678 for community improvements.

In this 10th year of participation in the awards program, the Bank of America presented cash prizes and other awards to the clubs totaling $5,500.

The clubs represent the junior membership of the California Federation of Women's Clubs and are designed primarily to unite young women in service to their communities.

Plans for $160 million I-15 extension announced

By DON GREEN
Staff Writer

Plans have been unveiled to build the long-delayed Norco Reach — an important link between Orange County and Ontario International Airport — as a $160 million freeway with six lanes from Corona to the outskirts of Ontario.

Four interchanges are proposed on the 11-mile stretch, the last big missing piece to Interstate 15 in California and a project under court injunction since 1975.

Lynn Schenk — state secretary for business, transportation and housing — announced the decision recently in Norco.

Larry Foutz — consultant with the Southern California Association of Governments on the ground-access study for OIA — said, "It certainly eases transportation."

He noted that the Norco Reach would provide another alternative for Orange County residents coming to the airport. Orange County is the second largest market for OIA, Foutz said.

When construction is complete, Orange County residents will have access to OIA by taking state Route 91 and then Interstate 15, he added.

Foutz noted passengers from Orange County now take state Route 57 to Interstate 10 to reach the airport.

The distance will not necessarily be reduced, Foutz said. However, he pointed out that congestion is expected on state Route 57 when OIA is at its "busiest" in future years.

Foutz said the ground-access study assumed completion of the project to roughly coincide with first phase of the new OIA terminal. When it looked like the project might die, the ground-access steering committee urged the state to push for the project, he said.

He noted that the Norco Reach would provide an alternative route to development planned around the area of the former Ontario Motor Speedway, easing future congestion on Interstate 10.

Schenk played a major role in moving the project off dead center, although the Norco Reach still faces several hurdles. Delays over the years have frustrated government officials, particularly Assemblyman Walter Ingalls, D-Riverside.

As chairman of the Assembly Transportation Committee, Ingalls has been in a position to make his strong feelings known.

The project was first proposed as an eight-lane freeway, but state and local government officials were pleased with the prospects for six lanes in light of Reagan Adminstration policies against eight-lane routes.

The Norco Property Owners Association sought the injunction granted by a federal district court. The city of Norco was originally a plaintiff, but dropped its end of the suit after three city councilmen were recalled over the issue.

The court said the state's environmental-impact statement was inadequate. Little progress was made for five years and then Adriana Gianturco, director of the California Department of Transportation (Caltrans), called for a study of a four-lane plan last year. Ingalls strongly objected.

Schenk, who as agency secretary is, in effect, Gianturco's boss, took the unusual step of interceding on a specific project.

But asked last week if she overruled Gianturco, Schenk said "no" and that plan was the "administration's decision."

The environmental report must be completed and the project must get approval of the Federal Highway Adminstration before the Norco Reach will be an issue again in the court for lifting of the injunction. Federal funds will pay for 91 percent of the cost.

LeRoy Smoot — deputy director of Caltrans' district office in San Bernardino — said officials hoped to have the project back in court by August 1982 and have design work begin in early 1983.

The state faces a deadline of Sept. 30, 1986 to have all seven phases under construction, but Smoot was optimistic that the schedules could be met.

Dreier advocates 'easing off' on seniors' programs

By VONNE ROBERTSON
Staff Writer

Rep. David Dreier, R-35th Dist., said Wednesday that while he voted to support two programs which benefit senior citizens, both need to be eventually "eased off."

Dreier told guests at the sixth annual meeting of Get About Transportation in Claremont "senior citizens are the segment of society to which a debt is owed."

While Dreier voted to reinstate the minimum benefit program of Social Security at the present, he said the administration must eventually phase out the program.

One of the problems, Dreier said, is that some government workers who were able to qualify by having worked a minimum number of quarters in other jobs have gained Social Security benefits in addition to their government pensions.

The congressman stressed that no one on Social Security would have present benefits cut. The $122 "minimum benefit" program is an additional benefit, he explained.

Dreier said he supported eliminating student benefits under Social Security.

The congressman described the proposal of reducing payments from 80 to 55 percent for people retiring at 62 as "a cruel and inhuman cut."

He added, "You can't do this to people who are planning to retire within the next year and have made plans. But, the program will need to be eased off over a period of years."

According to Dreier, President Ronald Reagan has "taken bold steps" in attempting to modify the Social Security system.

"People can't say they don't know where Reagan stands," he added.

In discussing economic issues, Dreier said the present administration has already attacked two of four major goals. These are major budget cuts and an across-the-board personal income tax cut.

The other two, bringing about regulatory reforms and stabilization of the money supply — specifically reducing high interest rates — will be addressed when Congress reconvenes in September, he said.

"We need to slow the continued growth of government without the eradication of essential services," the congressman added.

"Granted, there are wastes, frauds and abuses in all departments of government," Dreier noted. "We must find and eliminate them and be as frugal as possible.

"Defense appropriations must be as streamlined as possible while maintaining a strong defense posture," he added.

Dreier's talked capped the annual meeting of Get About Transportation which included the election of new officers.

Janis Weinberger was named president of the board of directors of Pomona Valley Community Services.

Get About, which provides transportation for senior citizens and handicapped persons in Pomona, Claremont, La Verne and San Dimas, operates with the cooperation of the community services board, Advisory Council, the Pomona Valley Senior Citizens and Handicapped Transportation Authority Joint Powers Board.

The concept started seven years ago when four valley retirement centers and the Red Cross pooled the use of their vans one day a week to offer transportation to senior citizens.

According to M.R. Smeltzer, administrator at Hillcrest Homes in La Verne, representatives of Hillcrest, Mt. San Antonio Gardens, Claremont Manor and Pilgrim Place were seeking a way to help the 18,000 seniors in the valley who did not live in retirement centers.

From that informal beginning, Get About Transportation was established in 1977.

Ted Radamaker, retiring board president, noted that Get About now has 13 vehicles and will acquire another four this year.

Funding is from local revenues, government grants, cash fares and contributions.

Japanese who were 'relocated' begin to speak out

By GRACE-MARIE ARNETT
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Norman Yoshio Mineta was 11 when his family was uprooted from its comfortable San Jose, home and forced to board a train to Santa Anita Park near Pasadena to live in a horse stable.

Now a U.S. representative from San Jose, Mineta is one of thousand of Japanese-Americans who are beginning to discuss their experiences: being evacuated from their homes and incarcerated in camps for years during and immediately after World War II.

"The stables were not adequately cleaned out," Mineta recalled in an interview. "We had minimal furnishings, like steel Army cots and mattress covers which we filled with straw for sleeping."

While Mineta says he harbors "no rancor or bitterness," he does want to make sure "that nothing like this ever happens again."

About 120,000 American citizens suffered similar experiences when the U.S. gorernment decided to conduct a mass evacuation of Japanese-Americans from the Pacific Coast states and detain them in relocation camps while this country was at war with Japan.

Many of those incarcerated have since died. Most others have refused to talk about the experience, out of embarrassment. However, the issue is surfacing now, after 40 years, with formal hearings on the episode by a presidentially appointed Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians (CWRIC).

The $1 million study, scheduled for completion next year, will contain as much information as the nine-member commission can gather on what happened, both from some of the principals involved and from those with access to World War II files. It will recommend what remedy, if any, the federal government should offer to those who were swept up in the internment.

"It could be anything from recommending Congress vote a certain sum of money to each individual, to a public apology by the U.S. Congress on behalf of the government, to establishing a trust fund to aid Japanese-American senior citizens and students," Mineta said.

Rep. Robert T. Matsui, D-Calif., says he believes it is "unrealistic to expect any monetary compensation" to be paid by the federal government to the victims because of the current anti-spending mood of Congress.

Matsui, who was incarcerated in the camps until he was 5, says "more creative remedies are needed, such as scholarships for descendants or small business programs" for Japanese-Americans.

"But the main thing I hope the commission does is to get the matter out in the open, discussed, and over once and for all," Matsui said.

He and Mineta say their parents tried to forget "those dark days in American history" and tried to rebuild their lives after the war.

Why is the issue surfacing after 40 years? There are two dominant explanations.

First, Mineta said, there is a great curiosity among the children and grandchildren of those incarcerated about that time in history. They see the scars of those years on the lives of their parents, but can't get their parents to discuss it with them.

"It has been called a 'rape syndrome,' " Matsui said. "It happened, but to discuss it brings up shame. It brings up the feelings of 40 years ago that Japanese-Americans were disloyal to their country."

In a 1968 edition of "Prejudice, War and the Constitution," three authors conclude that deep-seated prejudices against Japanese-Americans stirred the emotions that eventually led to their wartime incarceration. The three, Jacobus tenBroek, Edward N. Barnhard and Floyd W. Matson, write:

"There was a widely held belief that coolie labor was thwarting the work of the unions and lowering the American standard of living ... and the Japanese citizens here were characterized by sneakiness, dishonesty, trickery and unfair competition."

Fifty years of racial and economic discrimination converged during World War II, they conclude, to stereotype the Japanese as "enemy aliens."

Second, there is a determination today to make sure it doesn't happen again.

"After the American Embassy was seized in Tehran," Mineta said, "there was a great outcry that we should round up all the Iranians in this country and put them in some sort of camps. When I heard that, I finally understood the emotions behind the country's actions during World War II."

Paul T. Bannai, a former evacuee, recently was named executive director of the CWRIC in Washington.

He was a U.S. representative from California until last year.

He and others are concerned because the U.S. Supreme Court upheld President Franklin D. Roosevelt's executive order authorizing the detention. "That ruling giving the order constitutional justification still is on the books," Bannai said.

On Dec. 18, 1944, the Supreme Court ruled in Korematsu vs. United States that one group of citizens may be singled out and expelled from their homes and imprisoned for several years without trial, based solely on their ancestry, according to a CWRIC document. Americans of Italian and German descent were not incarcerated, even though the United States was equally at war with thier mother countries.

In 1976 President Gerald Ford rescinded Roosevelt's executive order — but the court ruling is still valid.

First - and second-generation Japanese-Americans were affected by the Roosevelt order. Many were given only a few days to dispose of all of thier belongings and property before being loaded aboard trains for racetracks and fairgrounds where they were dept, often for months, until permanent camps were built.

"We were told to bring only what we could carry, which often was just a few suitcases," Bannai said.

He remembers his entire family living in one room in a barracks with a central bathroom and mess hall, and very little furniture.

Bannai, then 23, was released to harvest a sugar crop in Idaho and eventually served in the Army's all Japanese-American 442nd Regimental Combat Team. Ironically, for someone of a population suspected of disloyalty, he eventually was assigned to Military Intelligence school where he learned to speak Japanese — another irony — and participated in the postwar occupation of Japan.

"Many people ask why I would fight for a country that threw me in a concentration camp and denied me my rights as a citizen," Bannai said. "Many people lost their parents and children in those camps, and most lost their property and life savings, so they are very bitter.

"But my family instilled a belief in me when I was very young that America is my country, and I should try to be 100 percent American, the best American," Bannai said. "After the war, my family just picked up the pieces and rebuilt our lives."

Bannai owns the Bannai Realty and Insurance Co. in Gardena, now managed by his son Don. One daughter is a lawyer in private practice in Oakland, and another daughter has a law practice in Seattle, Wash. His wife, Dr. Hideko Bannai, holds a Ph.D. in education.

The commission Bannai heads was established by congressional legislation signed into law July 31, 1980, by former President Jimmy Carter. It was formed after several legislators, including Rep. Mike Lowry, D-Wash., sponsored bills to provide direct monetary compensation to the victims.

At first a $25,000 payment was suggested, but the figure was scaled down to $15,000. Neither proposal won much support since the full price tag to the federal Treasury was expected to be several billion dollars.

As a compromise, Congress authorized $1 million for the study commission to determine the true injury to the Japanese-American citizens and decide what remedy is in order.

"Y's Way to a Healthy Back"

The West End YMCA announces the beginning of a new program entitled, "The Y's Way to a Healthy Back," designed for people who suffer from low back discomfort. Sue Smith, associate physical director, has received recent certification as a trained instructor in this program.

The seven-week program will begin on Sept. 21 and will meet twice weekly at the Y. Class times are Mondays and Wednesdays 12-12:45 p.m. or Mondays and Wednesdays 6-6:45 p.m. Smith reports that a number of YMCA's across the country are using the program with excellent results. The program is also geared for people who are regualr exercisers and yet suffer back discomfort. Long distance runners have also been helped by this program, she reported. A fee is charged for this class. For more information call 986-5847. To register come to the West End YMCA, 215 W. C St., Ontario.

Human relations for Supervisors/Managers

The Chaffey College Management Department will offer "Human Relations for Supervisors/Managers" (MGMT 524) during fall quarter.

The four-unit course offers a study of group dynamics and the application of basic psychological principles and knowledge about leadership styles and techniques to current supervisory problems, such as gaining cooperation, resistance to change and motivating for productivity.

Professor Edgar Wallace will teach "Human Relations for Supervisors/Managers" on Tuesdays from 6:30 to 10:20 p.m. on the main Chaffey College campus, 5885 Haven Ave., Alta Loma. The first class meeting will be Sept. 15.

Registration for fall quarter classes will be held Sept. 1,2,3 and 4. Late enrollment and registration will be held the first week of classes, Sept. 15 through 21. New students must complete an Application for Admission prior to registering for classes. Applications are available at the Admissions Office and satellite center offices.

All credit classes at Chaffey College are tuition-free, and enrollment is open to anyone 18 years old or older or a high school graduate.

For further information about this and other Chaffey College courses and programs, call 987-1737, 822-4484 or 735-0242, extension 251. The hearing impaired may call the college's special TTY number, 989-7638.

There's nothing science fictiony about Mobots

By NOLAN DAVIS
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — Mobots are robots.

But there is nothing science - fictiony about them.

They already exist. Several factories across the country have Mobots right now and the San Diego - based creator of these wonders believes more companies will order them in the future.

Mobots don't walk or talk or think or look like mechanical men.

Made of modular sections, Mobots ("modular robots") are unglamorous assemblies of wires and pneumatic tubes. "Mobot" is a trademarked name. It is not the only industrial robot around.

To an industrialist or manufacturer, however, they may be downright beautiful.

That's because Mobots are handy for working in environments which are off limits for human beings: ovens, vacuums, electronic "clean" rooms, toxic atmospheres, corrosive chambers, explosive areas.

Motobs are used in baking, die-casting, molding, plainting, bottling and electronic processes.

Preprogrammed to perform simple tasks, Mobots can lift, insert, push, pull rotate, invert and sort items as heavy as 500 pounds or as light as a single sheet of paper.

And they can perform high - speed, repetitive operations in as little as four seconds a cycle. Human beings find this kind of work "hectic" and "monotonous."

Fortunately for mankind, the inventor of Mobots doesn't think they will ever eliminate human beings.

He is Laurence J. Kamm, a local jogger who worked on inventions for years out of the den of his home before hitting on the Mobot concept.

"Mobots can replace one in 40 mass - production people," Kamm said. "But wherever there is vision, dexterity and judgment required, Mobots are inadequate.

"They can only do loading, feeding and material handling — the boring, so-called demeaning, monotonous jobs. The people they replace in these jobs then can become skilled technicians and make more money."

Despite being head of a fast - growing corporation, Kamm still brings his lunch to work in a brown bag.

A bald, stocky electrical engineer, Kamm is as precise as his machines.

Described by his employees as being "preoccupied" rather than intense, he had just come back from a trip to Michigan, where he visited several potential customers as well as conferred with one of his company's three district managers.

He is president and chairman of Mobot Corp., a San Diego - based firm which he says has sold $1 million worth of so-called modular robots in the last year to big companies like General Motors, IBM, American Can Co. and International Harvester.

For Kamm, the growth of Mobot Corp. is a dream come true.

"I'm doing what every entrepreneur wants to do," he said, "starting a successful company and running it."

The company is one of a dozen such firms in the world. But Kamm said his company makes a wider variety of industrial robots than its competitors.

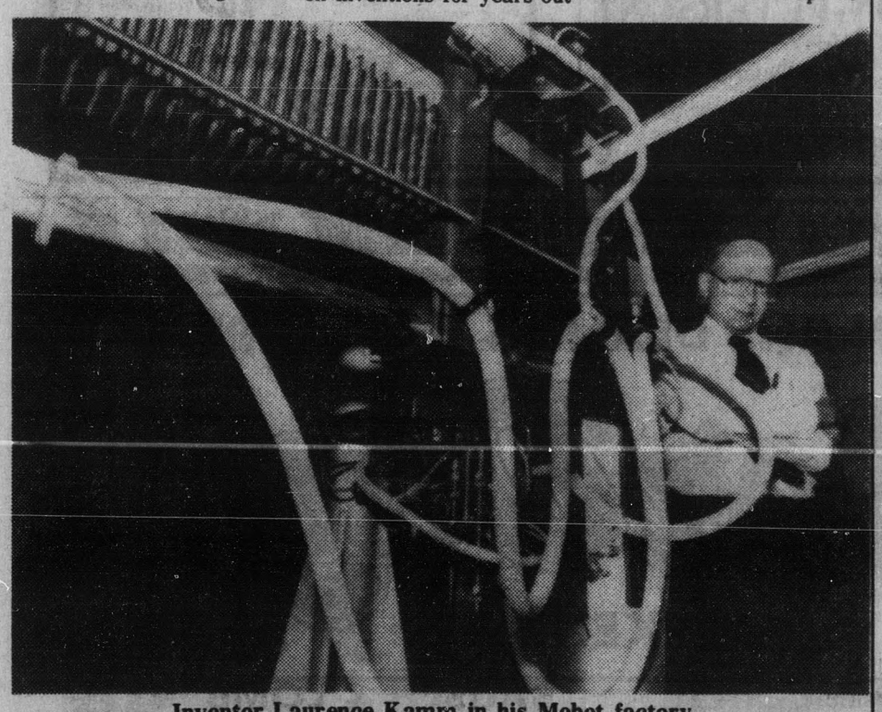

Located in a cream - colored cinder block building on a quiet cul - de - sac, Mobot Corp. now employs 35 people — up from Kamm and two employees just two years ago.

Kamm now expects Mobot Corp. to make mountains of money.

"There's a $4 billion business in Mobots in the United States and we're going after it," he said. "We ignore foreign markets. We don't have enough capital to exploit the American market — or even a fraction of its potential."

Recently, he said, Mobot Corp. established a national sales network for its so-called modular robot systems. The company now has 22 distributors throughout the United States with three new sales offices — in Detroit, Cleveland and Rockford, Ill.

Looking through wire - rimmed glasses, Kamm sat behind a big desk at his factory, staring dispassionately at a visitor. In a low murmur which sounded almost prophetic, not to mention optimistic, he said: "There will be a shake-out and our system will survive and the others will not. They make expensive and inappropriate machinery. We make practical, cost - effective manufacturing machinery."

Inventor Laurence Kamm in his Mobot factory.

Making your day personal

The marriage vows which are exchanged by countless couples today, "... for richer, for poorer, for better, for worse, in sickness and in health..." derive from the vows exchanged by our Anglo - Saxon forefathers.

In earlier times, a bride was taken "... for fairer, for fouler, for better, for worse," and promised to be 'buxom and bonny" to her future husband (from "With This Ring" by Elizabeth Laverack, Elm Tree Books, London).

It was customary for the bride's father to present his new son-in-law with one of his daughter's shoes as a token of authority. Ms. Laverack points out. The bride was then made to feel the transfer by a blow on the head with the shoe.

It was also the custom for the new husband to keep the shoe above his side of the marriage bed, as a constant reminder to the wife of her husband's authority.

Women have come a long way since those times. No longer must a wife make a view to "love, honor and obey" during the marriage ceremony.

In fact, more and more couples are personalizing their wedding ceremony by writing their own vows or by borrowing from tradition and creating an individualized ceremony along traditional lines.

Once the date has been set and the arrangements for the church or temple have been made, it is time to start thinking about the type of ceremony you and your fiance wish to have.

Will you keep to the time-honored ceremony and vows? Or will you add your own touches? "Bride's" magazine gives the following pointers to assist the undecided couple:

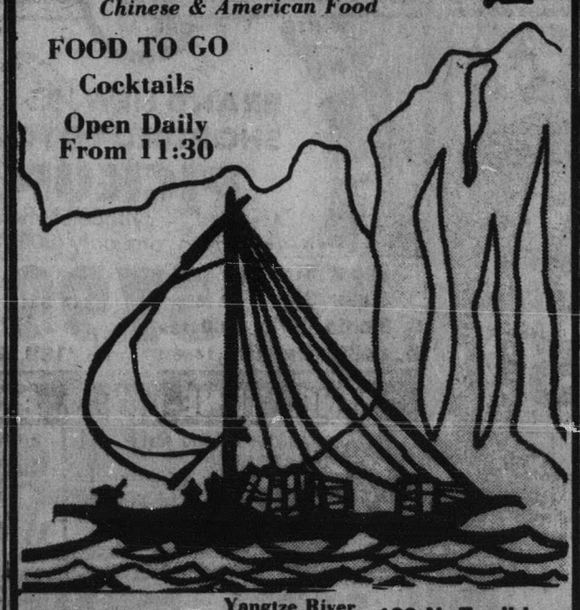

* Talk to your clergy-member. He or she will tell you which part of the ceremony are required by your religion, and which parts of the ceremony you are free to change.

* Study the traditional ceremony. You can rewrite it in your own words, choose to disregard certain elements of it (for example, Bride's" points out that individually-minded couples might flinch at the idea of "two becoming one"), or decide which of the quaint customs you wish to include.

* Look for natural points in the ceremony where you can add your own touches. Appropriate points would be in the procession, the giving away of the bride, the vows, the ring ceremony, the prayers, the kiss and the recessional.

* Look for ways to involve your family and friends. You might choose to walk down the aisle with both of your parents. Maybe a sister or brother could read an opening prayer. Or the four parents would light a marriage candle from two tapers to symbolize your union.

Success comes hard for 'Pueblo' vet

By FRANK RHOADES
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — "Chuck" Law says he is a "better person" today for having been imprisoned 11 months by North Koreans after they captured the U.S. naval intelligence ship Pueblo, Dec. 23, 1968.

Preparing himself for a civilian career was tough for the Pueblo's quartermaster, but, in less than 20 months after his discharge from the Navy on Nov. 25, 1979, Law has elevated himself to the general managership of the three Culpepper restaurants here.

Moonlighting as a bartender in San Diego while still a Navy enlisted man, Charles B. Law Jr. had a chance to observe restaurant operations, even was permitted to do a bit of cooking.

Sounds easy enough, but Law had a serioues eye problem resulting from a lack of vitamins as a prisoner in North Korea.

"The diet was rice and turnips, sometimes fried, sometimes in soup. I have no central vision."

Law also lost 100 pounds in prison — where he was beaten with clubs by North Korean officers and subjected to hour after hour of interrogation, sometimes with wire around the calves of his legs to stop circulation.

"This was during the first six weeks when they were trying to sell us socialism. Interrogation was constant during the last six weeks when they needed confessions of spying to justify the capture. All confessed."

Numerous owners of bar-restaurants were ready to give sailor Law off-duty bartending jobs.

"Before my eyes were damaged, I had planned to try for a career as a navigator in the tuna fleet," Law recalls. "But now this was impossible.

"I would have to get into something else and work harder and longer to compete."

Charlie Pratt was only one of a half-dozen bar owners who hired Law during the next few years, proprietors proud of having him around.

Despite this and a welcome from the city when the Pueblo crew returned, Law is opposed to liberated prisoners being regarded as returning heroes. Meaning his own type of prisoner, and political hostages.

He says of the parade staged here for the Pueblo crew: "I wish they hadn't done it. We stayed imprisoned because there was nothing we could do about it. Nothing heroic about that."

Chuck also is repelled by war veterans demonstrating at government hospitals as a means of pointing up their causes.

"They no doubt have some legitimate protests," Law says. "But that's no way to make them. It damn near makes me mad at those Vietnam veterans."

Law says too many Vietnam veterans are "looking for something for nothing."

As a disabled veteran himself, he advised them to "get out and make something of yourselves." Law has five campaigns in Vietnam on his record and says so many in the Army were "dopers."

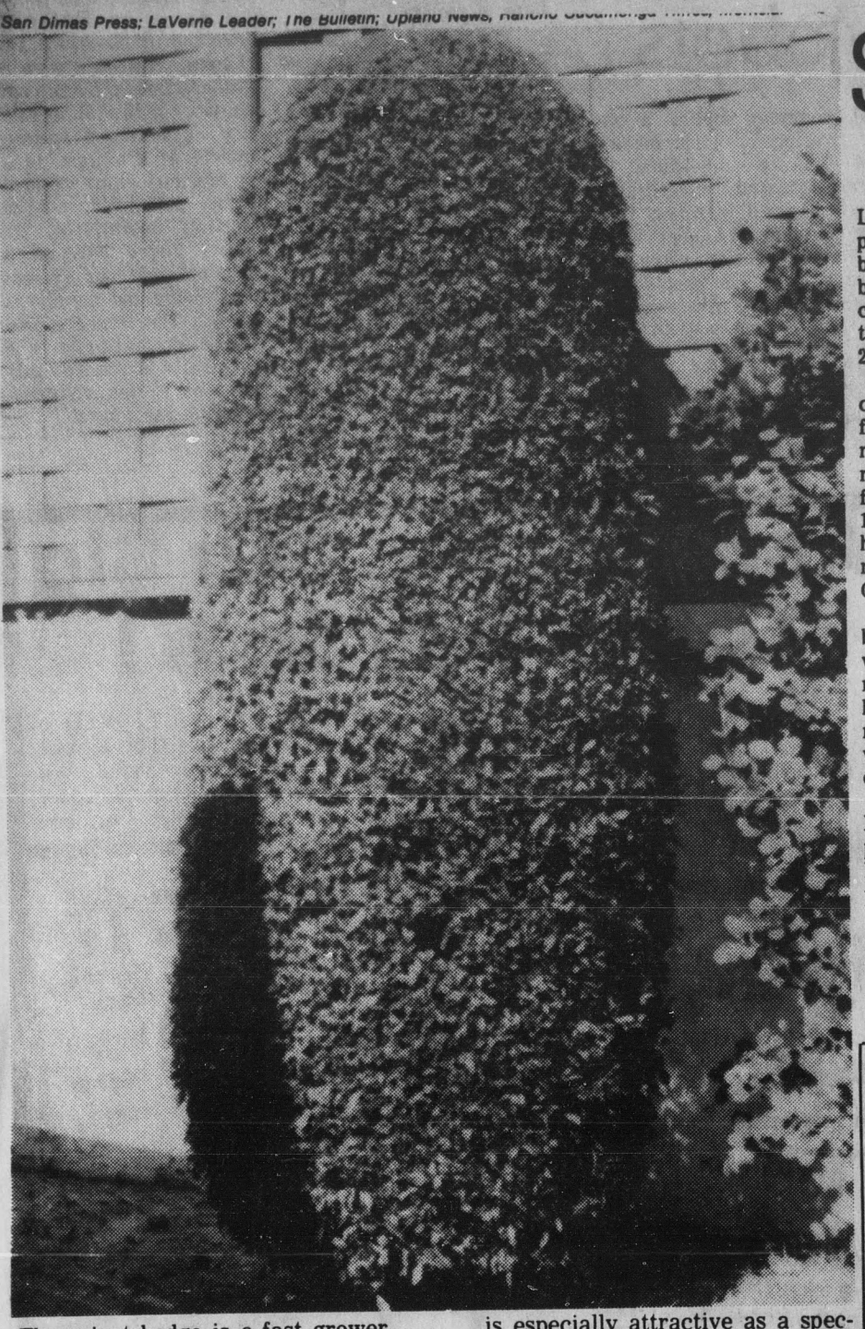

"The guys with genuine complaints are saying nothing about it."

The privet hedge is a fast grower that makes a beautiful clipped formal hedge or can be allowed to grow informally as a tall screen. It is especially attractive as a specimen shrub either grown into a small tree or easily pruned into a more formal appearance.

Use privet to create a fast-growing hedge

It's hard to find a better shrub for hedging than the privet. It grows fast enough to start clipping within a year, can be kept low and formal or allowed to grow tall and informal. When it's cared for properly, it has a neat, clean look about it which only a boxwood can equal or surpass.

Usually the image gardeners have of privet is one of formality as a clipped row of green. But the California Association of Nurserymen assures us that privets are very often used as informal tall screens and even as specimen shrubs that are grown into small tree size and shape.

A common mistake made by gardeners who prefer the formal look to the privet hedge is in the clipping. It's a natural tendency to shear from the top down but this practice will result in the hedge having more foliage at its top than at its base. This is all wrong, since proper shearing should consist of creating a slightly pyramidal form so that as much light hits the lower leaves as hits the upper. This permits an even density of foliage throughout the hedge.

A privet will grow through a summer of drought, but its growth is less than luxuriant and the shrub will be weakened by thirst which makes it a target for whiteflies and other pests. So be sure to keep them watered. They like the sun but give them part shade in inland areas. They are not particular to soil.

There are many varieties of privet available to the gardener. Some of the more popular are the Japanese privet (Ligustrum japonicum) with its dense compact growth to 10-12 feet, the Ligustrum japonicum 'Texanum' growing to 6-9 feet and very lush in foliage or the glossy privet (L. lucidium) which is an evergreen tree that will eventually reach 35-40 feet or can be kept lower.

Gardener's checklist

— Now is the time to begin thinking about plants for fall color in your garden.

— This is an ideal time to add citrus, dwarf for full-size, to your garden. They like the warm weather which gets them off to a good start.

— If you haven't pruned your cane berries, do so without delay.

— Now is the time to plant the early flowering sweet peas for color during the holiday season.

— For bigger and better blooms from your chrysanthemums, disbud them now and this is also the time to stake and tie them to prevent drooping and breaking.

Let's talk

Spouse must be accepted on own level

By REV. W. LEE TRUMAN
Copley News Service

"Any change which takes place within the self-image, changes the marriage relationship," says Dr. William Sanford, a psychologist and successful marriage counselor.

He feels that the success of a marriage is dependent to a large extent on the degree of spiritual growth of the partners. Sanford states that when one mate grows emotionally and spiritually and the partner's life stagnates, serious problems in marriage can arise.

Part of the problem, he says, is that a successful marriage in America is evaluated in terms of externals. This is the sexual, economic, and social compatability the two have together. Rarely is it thought of in terms of an inter emotional and spiritual compatability. Yet it is this very area in marriage where a breech between a couple may slowly come which later causes the fracturing of the relationship.

Sanford says that one partner may move toward God or a spiritual understanding of our world and a deeper interpretation of life and this causes a disturbance in the equilibrium of the relationship of a marriage. This will not necessarily destroy the marriage but it can bring problems.

He explains, "A fundamental problem of our occidental world is that we have been taught from childhood to look outside of ourselves for happiness. It's part of our conditioning, and is almost demanded as a framework of thinking. We blame everyone, parents, society, or God for our disasters rather than to look for answers we need within ourselves to take the responsibility for decisions we have made the things we have done."

Philosophic self-responsibility is not a popular idea in our present society. Sanford sees this role of interior growth as a point of understanding of the dynamics of marriage, and as the responsibility of both parties in the marriage.

"Almost certainly," he goes on to say, "one partner in a marriage is more religious than the other. It becomes the responsibility of the person who is more reflective to understand and accept the spouse who is less likely to develop a spiritual understanding of the world in which we live."

His conclusions are that it is one of the responsibilities of a married person who is more mature, to accept his or her spouse on his or her own level. The person who is growing emotionally and developing an inner awareness will set the example for the spouse who has not taken a step. The test of the validity of what they have found can be the thing that makes the marriage dynamic and richer.

Child care sign-up set at North Hills

Registration for the new school year is now open at North Hills Child Development Center in Claremont. The state licensed center at 1717 N. Mountain Ave. is open five days a week (Monday through Friday-except legal holidays) from 6:30 a.m. until 6 p.m. for area youngsters ages 2 through 6 years of age.

An educational program is offered by director Thelma Chaidez and her trained staff. Chaidez says, "The staff provides opportunity for social, intellectual, physical, and spiritual growth as it creates an environment of varied experiences for those enrolled." Her philosophy is that, "Each child deserves opportunity to fulfill his or her total development as an individual."

Before coming to Claremont, Mrs. Chaidez spent 11 years in childhood development. Most recently she directed the La Sierra Childhood Development Center in Riverside for five years. Prior to that she was Head Start Director in the Fresno/Madera area. Her education in early childhood development was obtained at San Jose State and Loma Linda University in Riverside.

For application or information, call Mrs. Chaidez at 625-3979 between 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. or visit the school at

Surviving in today's investment world

Women's role is growing in money management

By JIMMY THORNTON
Copley News Service

There are some harsh realities modern woman must confront if she is to survive in today's investment world.

She should know that 85 percent of all married women will end up living alone. Half of today's marriages are ending in divorce. Most women still outlive their husbands. Eight of 10 men die without leaving a will.

That's why a woman's dependency on her husband has to be less — if she is to survive. She's come a long way — and don't call her "baby" — over the years. It's a challenge women are meeting head-on.

These are some of the points being emphasized in a series of seminars for women conducted by Merrill Lynch, the "bullish on America" investment people.

Ann Benson, an investor specialist for the brokerage, said she found that a few years ago women were expressing to her an interest in investing. However, she found that mostly men attended investment gatherings. Women, she said, were not interested in the male-dominated confabs.

Hence the special program to attract women investors. And their money.

The seminars include a brief film, a panel discussion moderated by Benson in a question-and-answer format and a segment in which the audience asks the panel questions.

In a booklet given to people attending the meetings, Merrill Lynch points out that women are a major force in today's economy — as earners, consumers and investors.

Women attending the seminars range in age from the very young to the not-so-very-old. Some are dressed for their work in the executive suite, where their name is on the door. And you can bet they had someone back at the office answering the boss's phone. Theirs.

The seminar's booklet is titled, "You and Your Money. A Financial Handbook for Women." It gives several reasons why investment is getting the woman's touch — as in management of it.

For one thing, women today make up half the work force and bring home paychecks totaling $250 billion or more each year.

Women represent 50.3 percent of all adult stockholders. Some 12 million women own stock or mutual-fund shares.

Life insurance coverage in force for women rose 90 percent between 1970 and 1976 — from $200 billion to $380 billion.

And individual women holders of American Express credit cards rose 171 percent in six years, from 700,000 in 1972 to 1.9 million in 1978.

If that's not impressive enough, the booklet points out women control the spending of almost half a trillion dollars a year. Clearly, it's more than a man's world.

The seminars are not out to tell women what to do if their husbands leave them stocks and bonds: instead, they are intended to prepare women for managing the money they earn from their own careers.

The film shown at the seminars depicts three types of women: One, young and single, whose idea of money management is buying a cheap stereo because the men in her life will have the good stuff. Another finds herself alone at midlife but meets the challenge by trading her outdated teaching credentials for a new career as a lawyer, and she succeeds.

The third woman shared the family finance management with her thoughtful husband. "I was happy to have this involvement ... I felt I was one step ahead. ... It was my responsibility to know what the hell is going on!"

The theme: Each woman had her own individual financial needs, and any woman actively involved in money management was "A Step Ahead," the film's title.

A recent panel included Jeannette Williams, Merrill Lynch account executive, Julie A. Buchanan, an account executive introduced as a woman pioneer in her previously all-male field, Cynthia A. Ekberg, account executive, and John R. Donaldson, assistant vice president.

The panelists talked about the nitty-gritty of understanding investing, then gave a few tips.

Ekberg, for example, suggested that women keep a diary, one that lists small cash payments for which you don't get a receipt but which are related to investing, becoming tax deductions. Expenses like copying securities, taxi fare or other transportation costs related to managing your portfolio and banking fees (like that for the safety box you rent to keep stocks in).

In general, the panel recommended these steps for women to follow in organizing their finances:

— Assess your net worth, Williams said, listing things like bank and savings accounts, equity in the home, stocks and bonds, jewelry, cars and other items of value.

— Determine your actual cash flow (what income is coming in and what's going out for bills and other expenses). Buchanan suggested every household have two months' income set aside in an emergency fund. It should be money you can gain use of without delay.

— Create a realistic budget, Williams added.

— Keep efficient records, making certain your spouse is acquainted with your files.

— Establish priorities and outline objectives (for example, if you are in a high income-tax bracket, avoid investments that increase your immediate income. Look to tax-exempt or deferred income holdings as tax shelters).

— Plan for major expenses, like purchase of a home, financing your children's education or starting your business.

— Review your insurance from time to time, Donaldson emphasized, to see if their are any coverage gaps, taking into account the rising costs of living.

— Ask your employer to explain your benefits so you can use them fully or supplement them if needed (you may find you have, say inadequate group life insurance coverage).

— Periodically check the balance in your Social Security account, suggested Ekberg (forms for this are available at Social Security branch offices).

— Make a will and review it from time to time.

— Plan for retirement: start a special retirement savings and investing plan.

Thinking of taking a class?

Money management

Looking for help in managing your money?

A class offered at Sandburg Jr. High School, Glendora, through the auspices of Citrus College Noncredit Community Education program may have just the information you are looking for. It's called "Money Matters."

It will be held each Wednesday from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m., from Sept. 16 to Jan. 27, in Room 201 of the school, located at 819 W. Bennett, Glendora.

There is no charge for the course, and registration will be held in the classroom at the first session attended.

Instructor is Joanne Wilner, an accountant and real estate salesperson.

Additional information about all noncredit classes at Citrus College may be obtained by calling (213) 335-0521 or (714) 599-8339, extension 329.

Music and Mexico

"The History of the Mexican People Through Music," a three-unit college credit class instructed by David Medrano, will be offered this fall at Citrus College on Tuesday evenings, 6:30 to 9:30, beginning Sept. 15.

Guest speakers and performers and musical demonstrations will also be included, according to Medrano, who is a graduate of Citrus College and the University of California at Davis. "No musical knowledge is required to take the class," Medrano said, "just the desire to learn something different."

The class is offered through the Citrus College sociology program in the Behavioral Science Department.
